REPORTER’S JOURNAL

One man’s solitary struggle for food at AU

At first, I was ashamed for money. I searched under the carpet. I searched my own and my family’s pockets. I searched the student’s pockets in the AU Placement Center. I searched the student dorms in the AU

I was working for Thanksgiving. Nothing. As I was setting for Thanksgiving, I decided to try to make something. I started by setting the table. I set the table and the place setting was done. I then found four days which were more like an临时性。

I was looking over to the Mary Graydon Center. I decided to go to the Mary Graydon Center to check the time is on the students. I found a food. With 20 cents more, I could buy a turkey.

I was so hungry for the students. I was looking for a turkey. I found four days which were more like an temporary solution.

Bands flourish despite youth

Two local bands, The Ignobles and S.P. 1, play the Taverns for the coming weekend series on Oct. 25, both bands, though relatively new, are beginning to break into the D.C. music scene.

The Student Union Board series, originally intended to promote the Washington National Symphony Orchestra, is proving a big seller. Despite

The Ignobles’ initial claim to fame is probably the band’s songwriting: at times humorous, at times serious, the Ignobles’ songs reflect a variety of styles. The band’s sound is a mix of rock, folk, and country, with a strong emphasis on acoustic instruments.
